

Your week-by-week guide to feeling prepared

PREGNANCY PLANNER

WEEKS 4 – 40

A calm place for everything.

This planner is designed to hold everything pregnancy brings — the appointments, the tasks, the thoughts, the questions. Not all at once. Just one week at a time.

Each weekly page gives you a gentle structure: a handful of suggested tasks to get you started, space to add your own, a habit tracker for the small daily things, and room to write how you're feeling.

There's no pressure to fill everything in. Use what helps. Leave what doesn't. This is your planner.

HOW TO USE IT

- Weekly pages run from Week 4 to Week 40.
- Suggested tasks are pre-printed — tick them off or ignore them.
- Blank checkboxes at the bottom of each section are yours to fill in.
- The habit tracker runs Mon–Sun. Write your habit on the line, fill circles as you go.
- Appointments, checklists, and notes pages are at the back.

Weeks 1 – 12

You might not look different yet, but everything is already changing.

This is the quietest trimester from the outside — and often the most overwhelming on the inside. You may feel exhausted in a way that's hard to explain, or nauseous, or both. That's not weakness. That's your body doing something extraordinary.

This trimester is mostly about rest, and letting things settle. There isn't much you need to do yet, and that's okay. A few gentle things will come your way — a booking appointment, a first scan — and this planner will walk you through them, one at a time.

For now, be kind to yourself. The planning can wait. You can't do this wrong.

Weeks 13 – 26

This is where most women find their breath again.

The fog of the first trimester tends to lift, and with it comes a little more space to think, to plan, to even enjoy this. Your bump will start to show. At some point, you'll feel movement — and that moment tends to make everything feel more real.

This is a good time to start thinking ahead, gently. Not all at once — just a little each week. Appointments to book, things to look into, lists to begin. Nothing is urgent. Everything has time.

Use this trimester to get curious, not busy. There's a difference.

Weeks 27 – 40

You're in the home stretch — and you're more ready than you feel.

Things might feel heavier now — physically and emotionally. That's real, and it's okay. Your body is preparing for something remarkable, and it's allowed to take up space doing so.

This trimester is about getting ready, not perfect. A bag packed. A few preferences written down. A little more rest wherever you can find it. The to-do list in this planner will feel manageable because it is — it's been designed so nothing sneaks up on you.
